

Sometimes you will only have a citation, and perhaps an abstract, for an article. You can use the citation to find the article in a few simple steps.

The citation has the essential information you need to locate the full article.

Follow these 3 steps to learn if an article is available through the Library:

1. From within databases, use the Get it @ UP link.

Get it @ UP links will display in Clark Library databases for each result when full text is not immediately available in a particular database.

In this results list, Get it @ UP links appear for results 6 and 7.

The Get it @ UP tool will search for the journal or magazine where the article appears.

The screenshot shows a search results page with three entries. Entry 5 is 'More than Skin Deep: Perceptions of, and Stigma against, Tattoos' by Martin, Benjamin A.; Dula, Chris S., from College Student Journal, v44 n1 p200-206 Mar 2010. It has links for 'HTML Full Text' and 'PDF Full Text'. Entry 6 is 'The Skin We Ink: Tattoos, Literacy, and a New English Education' by Kirkland, David E., from English Education, v41 n4 p375-395, 2009. It has a 'Get it @ UP' link. Entry 7 is 'Teacher Candidate Fashion, Tattoos, and Piercings: Finding Balance and Common Sense' by Colbert, Ron, from Childhood Education, v84 n3 n159 C Spr 2008. It also has a 'Get it @ UP' link. Arrows point to the 'Get it @ UP' links in entries 6 and 7.

Get it @ UP results from a database might look like this:

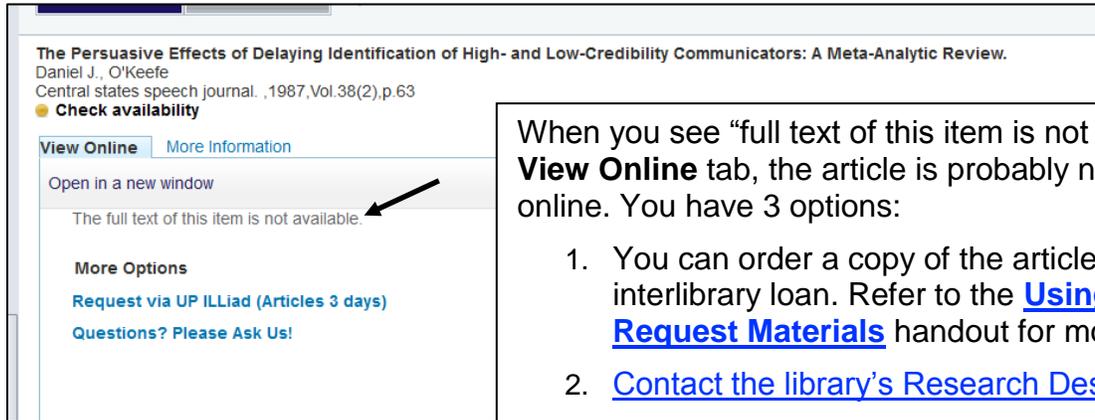

The screenshot shows a search result for 'What medical nutrition therapy guideline is recommended post-cholecystectomy%3D'. The author is Marcason W, and the journal is the Journal of the Academy of Nutrition and Dietetics, 2014, Vol.114(7), p.1136. A green dot indicates 'Full text available'. There are 'View Online' and 'More Information' tabs. Below the tabs, it says 'Open in a new window'. Further down, it says 'Get it now: Elsevier ScienceDirect Complete' and 'Available from 2012 Volume (1 vol per request) 112 issue: 1'. At the bottom, it says 'Can't Find It? Request via UP ILLiad (Articles 3 days) Please Ask Us!'.

When a database name (e.g. "Elsevier ScienceDirect Complete") appears in the View Online tab, it means the full text should be available online.

If the database link doesn't take you to the article, you may request it through UP ILLiad. Refer to the Using UP ILLiad to Request Materials handout for more information.
