

Once installed, the LibX Library Browser Plugin looks like this:

Select the arrow to the right of “Search” to choose from UP Library Search, Google Scholar, Open WorldCat, or the Library’s list of databases.

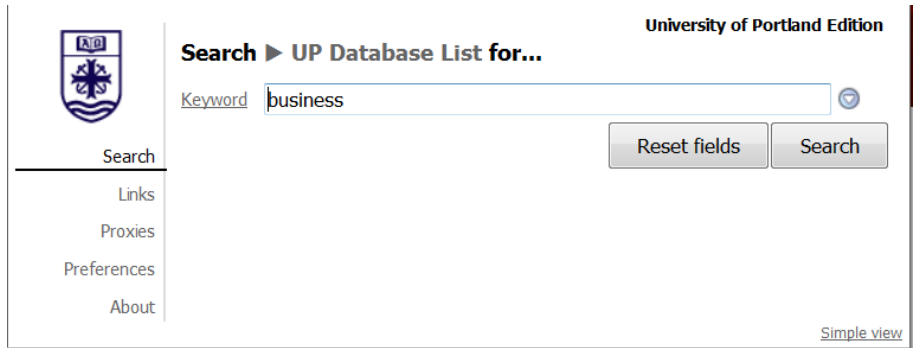

Select the link to the left of the search box (e.g. “Keyword,” shown in the above picture) to see a list of search fields.

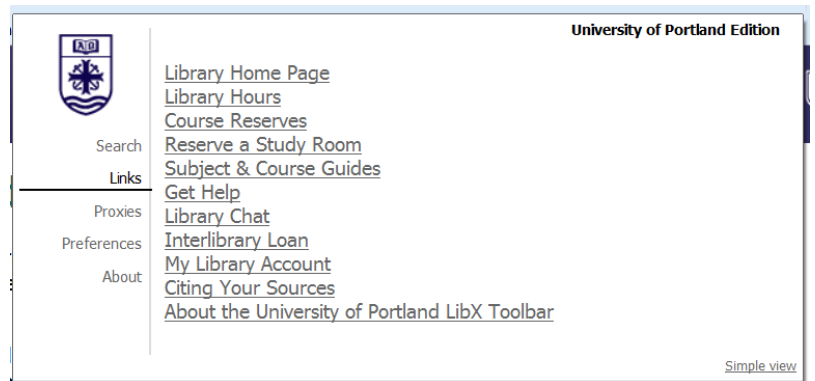

Select the button to the right of the search box to add search boxes. Select the “X” button to remove a box.

Search the UP Database List by discipline to identify useful resources.

Select the “Proxies” option on the far left to reload a page through the library’s proxy server – useful if you’re off campus and you’ve followed an on-campus link.

Follow the “Preferences” link (as in the image shown above) and select “Context Menu” to be able to send highlighted text directly to your selections.

Cigarettes end life early for two out of every three smokers: New study published

This is a picture of the plugin's context searching in action. You can send the journal title "BMC Medicine" to UP Library Search, to start tracking down this study.
